Proposed Sand Creek Massacre Memorial passes key hurdle

By Megan Verlee

A proposed memorial to the Sand Creek Massacre passed a major hurdle Aug. 19, winning unanimous approval from the committee that manages the state capitol grounds.

The Capitol Building Advisory Committee left open the question of where to put the memorial. Descendants of the Native American Indian tribes massacred at Sand Creek originally wanted it quite close to the Capitol building. But officials seemed to be leaning toward placing it in a park across the street.

The Sand Creek massacre occurred in 1864, when more than 600 U.S. volunteer soldiers attacked hundreds of Arapaho and Cheyenne in a village on the Eastern Plains, killing scores of people. The design would include a memorial path replicating the river bend where the attack happened in present-day Kiowa County.

Members of the Cheyenne and Arapaho tribes traveled to the hearing to lobby for the memorial, saying it would be a source of healing for their communities.

If it is eventually approved by the full state legislature, construction of the Sand Creek memorial could begin construction sometime next summer.

Standing Rock Sioux Indian reservation grows in numbers daily with supporters on the camping grounds.

There was a time when Rosa Parks said no, when Martin Luther King stood up for the civil rights movement and when others alike took a stand for what they believed in. In this moment in history, Tribal members from different cultures, nations and locations came together to join forces in support of protesting the Dakota Access Pipeline.

On the reservation of Standing Rock Sioux there were over 2,000 people with one thing in common: stop the construction of the Dakota Access Pipeline. The Dakota Access Pipeline is a pipeline that is planned to connect the Bakken and Three Forks areas in North Dakota to pipelines in Illinois. The DAPL will run through the Missouri river, the main source of water supply. The Standing Rock Sioux reservation was the first to take a stand against the construction. They believed the DAPL would sooner or later burst, causing massive leakage of oil and ultimately damaging water.

When one nation is in need of help, all nations will rise together to defend what is most vital to future generations. People, native and non-native alike, gathered specifically for the purpose of defending their water. As the support system of the Standing Rock Sioux Indian reservation grew, hearts were igniting with fire as people found knowledge and purpose in defending their water as they stood side by side.

“For me, it feels good, it feels good in my heart to see everybody come together, going around and getting to know everybody and their first name, where they’re from, sharing stories and it’s stories that keep us together as Native people. Stories is what keeps us alive and stories will always go down in history, it’s good that we’re all here from different nations and we’re all telling each other stories and we’re relying on the message that everybody’s here for a reason and we’re here to protect the water that gives life to this whole continent and world. That’s what I’m here for,” said Dean Dedman, with the Hunkpapa Tribe from the South Dakota side of Standing Rock.

The Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma contributed their support in the fight against the DAPL with Standing Rock Sioux Nation by sending 400 lbs. of buffalo meat and 150 cases of water. In addition to sending supplies, the tribes were one of the first in Oklahoma to issue an official letter of support to the Standing Rock Sioux pledging the support of the Cheyenne & Arapaho tribes.

On Saturday, Aug. 20 the protest grounds were alive with the sounds of drums, singing, cheering and praying. Although temperatures were rising during the day people did not stop contributing help; constantly giving assistance with food, water and donations of any kind to help support protesters of the DAPL. Tribal youth members from the Cheyenne Sioux River participated, taking a stand for what they believe in, by doing the one thing they loved most ... running. They ran continuously on foot from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. Jasilyn Charger, a runner from Eagle Butte Cheyenne River Sioux led the crowd with empowering chants that night. Tribal members joined together and cheered proudly, “We run for our brothers and our sisters, we run for our people, we run for water, for life.”

Over 2,000 people were reported on the campsite, with numbers growing to an estimated 5,000. Everyone was fed day and night. Tribal members with diverse cultural backgrounds united and committed their time and effort to be a part of this historical moment.

“We brought water, medical supplies, and tarps, just about anything that had to do with camping. Our reason for that is because of the water, the river. What I had felt several weeks ago when I saw what was happening here, it really moved me and I found that it was so important, especially when everybody began to gather and I realized we needed to be there. We needed to go and support the people,” Renee Sans Souci, with the Omaha Nation in Nebraska said.

There were over sixty-three different tribes represented on the Standing Rock Sioux reservation. Unity is what brought various tribes together for the sake of protecting their sacred lands and most importantly, the water.

“The main outcome is to see our people come together this way on behalf of the water. Without water none of us can live and we need to have that water for the future generations. Here we are. I think all of us who have that calling to protect the water, the women who are here, the men who are here, the youth who are here, the elders who are here, we’re all here on behalf of this river,” Sans Souci said.

Learning the ins and outs of the CA minors trust account

By Rosemary Stephens, Editor-in-Chief

Cheyenne and Arapaho Governor Eddie Hamilton and Lt. Governor Cornell Sankey host informational meetings focusing on understanding the Cheyenne and Arapaho tribes' minors trust account.

Leading the meetings and answering questions was Will Gungoll, Edward Jones financial advisor and Samuel Fuller, one of Providence First Trust Company's founding members.

"In 2008 there was a Tribal Council resolution establishing a minor's trust. During the years following there was never any action put into place for minors until the year 2011. I was the treasurer then and in 2010 we started setting aside monies from the per capita to include minors. We got in touch with Edward Jones, met with Mr. Will Gungoll and from there we started our relationship on establishing a minor's trust and today we are working with attorneys on both sides, the tribes and Edward Jones. I met Mr. Samuel Fuller from Providence First Trust in Boston at a Financial Officers Association conference and they handle a number of other tribes' minor's trust accounts and without any further delay

I would like to introduce Mr. Fuller to you to answer all your questions and explain the trust," Sankey stated.

Providence First Trust Company has an established reputation for the management and growth of other Native tribes throughout the country and oversees many tribal trust accounts. They created their 'TribalTrusts' division in 2001 that specializes in comprehensive trustee services for Native American trusts, especially minors.

Based out of Scottsdale, Arizona, Providence was founded in 1990 by a group of attorneys from the trustee-related businesses of their law firm. The founders of the company previously served as trustee through their law firm for decades and are still owned by the same principal founders.

According to their Website, www.providencefirst.com, Providence First Trust is a privately held corporation under Arizona for-profit corporation law and regulated by the Arizona Department of Financial Institutions. It is licensed to serve as trustee or agent of trustee for any kind of trust but specializes in serving as trustee for personal family trusts

"We do minor trust for a number of different communities around the country and we are excited to be here working with you," Fuller told the attendees. "There are several people involved in a trust, the grantor, which is the person who sets up the trust, in this situation it was your tribal leaders and as Cornell stated we have been working on this for awhile and you are really fortunate to have leadership like Gov. Hamilton and Lt. Gov. Sankey who have your best interest at heart and have worked very hard on this. See Minors trust account pg. 5

Carter Center visits Cheyenne & Arapaho country after invitation sent by tribal council coordinator

By Rosemary Stephens, Editor-in-Chief

On Aug. 24 the Cheyenne & Arapaho Tribal Council Coordinator Jennifer Wilkinson hosted a community meeting introducing the Carter Center, Democracy Program Brett Lacy to C&A country.

Wilkinson extended an invitation to the Carter Center to discuss their services in overseeing the 2017 C-A primary and general elections following the passing of a resolution during a May 7 special Tribal Council meeting held in Concho, Okla.

In 1982 former president Jimmy Carter, his wife Rosalynn, in partnership with Emory University first founded the Carter Center located in Atlanta, Georgia. According to the Carter Center Website, their mission states, in part, "The Carter Center, in partnership with Emory University, is guided by a fundamental commitment to human rights and the alleviation of human suffering. It seeks to prevent and resolve conflicts, enhance freedom and democracy and improve health."

The Carter Center's Democracy Program is mostly known for its international election observations across the globe. They have overseen 102 elections in 80 different countries, with two of those for an Oklahoma based tribe, Cherokee Nation in 1999 and 2011.

"We consider ourselves an international organization even though we are headquartered here in the United States. We are a non-profit organization who does international election observations. We recruit people from all over the world to serve on our team and we strive to make sure we are doing a non-partisan, not partial, neutral professional observation," Lacy, Carter Center Democracy Program associate director said.

She said what they do not do is interfere in the election process, they do not have any type of authority over the election, they do not administer elections, don't make any type of decisions about elections and, "not the boss of anybody or tell anybody what to do. We are just there to watch and observe all the aspects of the election. We are there to only observe and report."

The Democracy Program team will offer recommendations and release public statements during the different stages of the election process.

"Based on all the emails and communication from the last couple of months, we decided to come out and do an exploratory mission to better understand what the needs are specifically for the tribe," Lacy said. "Here we have met with two members of the election commission, we met with Governor Eddie Hamilton and we met with a couple of the legislators. We are gathering information on how elections are conducted here, what are the policies and procedures, we have read the Constitution and we read the 2015 Election Act, so we are just reading and gathering information."

Lacy said after the meetings, there would be an internal report submitted to former President Carter and leaders of the Carter Center followed by a decision making process that happens in Atlanta about whether or not this is an election the Carter Center should prioritize and be a positive and added value for the Carter Center to move forward with this election observation.

Following the decision making process, if the election is approved, then there is a fundraising period due to the Carter Center being a not-profit organization.

"We cannot take any money from the tribe and we cannot nor will not take any money from anyone associated with this tribe at any point of time as we need to maintain our financial independence and neutrality," Lacy said.

To begin any of the above process Lacy said the Carter Center must first be invited and welcomed.

"When we met with Governor Hamilton, he did bring it to my attention that he had issued a veto relating to our observation. On the question of invitation, it is one of our requirements that we are invited and welcomed by any nation where we observe. We do not want to insert ourselves into a situation where we are not welcomed and we do not want to overstep anyone. It is important we are welcomed by all factions," Lacy said.

Of the 15-20 tribal citizens in attendance at the meeting, the overall consensus was the need of a third party to oversee the tribes' 2017 primary and general elections, whether through the Carter Center or the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA). Currently a resolution requesting the BIA to oversee the elections has been introduced for consideration at the annual Tribal Council meeting to be held Saturday, Oct. 1, 2016 in Concho, Okla.

Raising the bar on driver education opportunities for tribal youth

By Latoya Lonelodge, Staff Reporter

Driving can mean a lot of things, such as freedom and independence, but it can also be a big responsibility.

The Cheyenne and Arapaho Transportation Safety Program and J.O.M. teamed up specifically to bring a driver's education class to tribal students. The class was held Aug. 9-10 in Calumet, Okla. with 20 students who participated in the class. Dal Ortega with Old School Driving School located in Woodward, Okla., taught the two-day class.

The driver's education class was the first to be held amongst the plans that the C&A Tribal Safety Program (TSP) has planned. Angela Blind, TSP Director, spoke on the challenges that tribal members face when getting their license.

"I noticed a trend when we try to seek tribal reference in hiring tribal members for some of the positions we were advertising, I noticed a lot of them didn't have driver's licenses," Blind said. "TSP is working specifically to ensure that tribal members get the opportunity not only to obtain their driving licenses, but that they are also fully educated on the responsibility associated with having a driver's license."

TSP teamed up with other programs such as R.E.Sp.E.C.T. (pseudonym for Recreation, Exercise, Sports for the Elders and Children of the Tribe) and Johnson O'Malley Program (JOM) for the class.

Students were shown videos that depicted the realities associated with driving and were educated on the harsh outcomes of drinking and driving.

"The other issues that we were dealing with are accessibility. A lot of our tribal members that live in outlying communities like Hammon, Elk City, Clinton, Ceiling, Woodward and Watonga; there are no testing facilities available to them. Driver's ed is costly, a lot of tribal members can't afford the costs that comes with driver's ed and so for the last four years we've been working with other programs to pull our resources together and come up with a program that we can provide to our tribal members to help, not only make it accessible to them and bring it to them in their communities, but also to help with the costs associated with driver's ed," Blind said.

By making driver's ed available for tribal members, there is hope that more opportunities will arise relating to jobs and getting rid of drinking and driving.

Tribal youth members learn the fundamentals of safety and driving at the driver's ed class held Aug. 9 in Calumet, Okla. (Photos by Latoya Lonelodge)

Dale Ortega, owner and operator of Old School Driving Academy, teaches driver's ed students the responsibilities associated with having a driver's license.

"Well lets start with the youth, how do we get our youth involved? So that's been our real driving force is to educate our youth and use them as advocates to educate older adults and be a flipped role model, and for the next generation that comes up behind and the next group of kids," Blind said.

Tribal youth are encouraged to take part in every opportunity that TSP offers to ensure they receive a driver's license; there will be incentives given to tribal members who have participated in classes and incentives are rewarded to those who have obtained a driver's license thereafter.

There is a Defensive Driving Course being offered at 10 a.m., Sept. 28 at the El Reno Public Safety Center in El Reno, Okla. For more information or to register contact Morgan Halfred at 405-422-7596.

Welch said CA Radio is not only a vital information source but also a place for entertainment, "we have our signature programming which includes storytellers, language instruction, special guest interviews birthday announcements, honor dance notices, public service announcements, plus a lot of powwow and drum music. We've just added a new program called Chasing the Beast, which feeds people's fascination with Bigfoot and caters to that audience. So there is something for everyone."

Cheyenne & Arapaho Radio is an affiliate of Native Voice 1 which airs popular Native programming such as Native American Calling and National Native News.

"The station is in its initial growing stages and we need listeners and station volunteers. We are just trying very hard to get the word out, and it's never easy starting something new, but it's been an interesting effort so far," Welch said.

Randy Burleson, CATV47 and CA Radio director said it is a part of their vision to promote local and national Native recording artists.

"We also want CA Radio to be a place where Native American recording artists can showcase their original music, all styles of music," Burleson stated.

Native American artist talks about his art, life and hopes

By Rosemary Stephens, Editor-in-Chief

Hopi artist hopes to leave a piece of himself on earth when he leaves ... after all rocks last forever.

Sixty-four year old Gary Franklin has been carving with stone for over 40 years. His technique he uses for his sculptures is in the tradition of his Hopi tribe called fetishes. According to Franklin a fetish is a stone which has had things added to it, such as his buffalo sculptures he adds parts of turquoise and coyote claws.

He has been sculpting rocks for over four decades.

Franklin was raised in the Calumet and El Reno, Okla. areas living and learning the Cheyenne and Arapaho ways.

"My father Gary Eugene Franklin Sr. was raised by Cheyenne Arapaho people, he could speak the language and sing the songs. He was raised by Sullivan (Miller) Big Nose in the Cheyenne ways," Franklin said.

Thinking back Franklin said he could remember all the stories told to him by Maude Wolf tongue. He would eventually attend school at the Concho Boarding School in Concho, Okla. where he would meet the boy who would become his lifetime friend, Ron Sweezy.

"I remember my whole raising up by the Cheyenne and Arapaho people. I went to the Concho Boarding School in the seventh grade and that's where I met Ron Sweezy. We found out we had a lot in common and we became steadfast friends that has lasted throughout our lives," Franklin said. "We also figured out we knew some of the same people and found out through the Cheyenne and Arapaho ways we kind of had the same relatives, so me and him were bonded from then on."

He said if you were driving through Concho back then, around 1971-72, on a weekend where the long line of cedar trees stood and you seen two Indian guys picking up trash that was he and Sweezy.

"When one of us got into trouble, they were always like okay, where's the other one?" Franklin laughed.

Franklin said the man he knew as grandpa, who raised his dad, had good connections with Concho Boarding School, so when Franklin's home life was enveloped in drinking and fighting, his grandpa got him into the school.

"There were six of us kids and five of us got to attend the boarding school. It was like dormitory style living ... a lot of the kids were a lot younger than us. I was sometimes bullied because all my siblings were all dark skinned and dark eye and I have green eyes and not so dark, but I rose above all that," Franklin said remembering back to his days at Concho. "When I finally did get to a secure place where there wasn't all this yelling and drinking and stuff going on I began to open up and from then on I was captain of the football team, student council president and when we started this Explorer Scout Post I was president of that too."

When Sweezy left Concho in 1973 to attend the Institute of American Indian Arts (IAIA) in New Mexico, a week later Franklin was given permission to attend IAIA.

"Ron left for art school first and rode the bus out there and a week later they called me and said 'yes you can come too.' I think I had $11 in my pocket and a free bus ticket to Santa Fe, New Mexico. I didn't know where I was going, just out of 11th grade and I got out there and the whole art thing opened up for me. It was some unbelievable times back then and everything we touched turned to gold," Franklin said. "Our first year was like 1973-74 and Ron and I looked at all of this around us and I thought man if they are going to teach me all of this I want to learn it all."

From that point on Franklin has been delving into art mediums of all different varieties, but his love, the art medium he has developed over the years and continues to do today, is sculpting from rock.

Gary Franklin holds up a memorabilia frame of past events in his life he holds dear in his heart.

"When I leave this earth I want to be remembered as the guy who could take a rock off the ground and create something beautiful," Franklin said.

According to Franklin a lot of people used to think he was crazy, weird because, "I can walk up on a rock on the ground and look at it and I can see what it's going to be. Others can't, they just see a rock. It's kind of looking at the clouds, you can see shapes in the clouds and others can't. I look at rocks and can see what it will be, others can't."

"I tell my nieces and nephews when I am gone you can look at one of my sculptures and say 'hey my uncle made that' because it's a rock and rock lasts forever. Some people will say 'hell no he was a no good alcoholic,' but you know I quit that 20 years ago. Someone told me once, 'Gary when the show's over, just go home.' And I just went home."

Franklin continues to sculpt rocks into beautiful art at his home in Oklahoma City with his main focus caring for his elderly mother Delores Fry.

Franklin's sculpted pieces are available for purchase through Luksi Creations located at 1909 N. Classen Blvd. in Oklahoma City.

Taking a stand at Standing Rock

On Aug. 24 Federal Court for DC District Judge James E. Boasberg heard arguments against the Dakota Access Pipeline from the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe. He is scheduled to issue his opinion on Sept. 9 and an appeal hearing has been set for Sept. 14 if either the Corps of Engineers or the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe is unhappy with the decision.

By David Archambault II, Chairman, Standing Rock Sioux

It is a spectacular sight: thousands of Indians camped on the banks of the Cannonball River, on the edge of the Standing Rock Sioux Reservation in North Dakota. Our elders of the Seven Council Fires, as the Oceti Sakowin, or Great Sioux Nation, is known, sit in deliberation and prayer, awaiting a federal court decision on whether construction of a $3.7 billion oil pipeline from the Bakken region to Southern Illinois will be halted.

The Sioux tribes have come together to oppose this project, which was approved by the State of North Dakota and the United States Army Corps of Engineers. The nearly 1,200-mile pipeline, owned by a Texas oil company named Energy Transfer Partners, would snake across our treaty lands and through our ancestral burial grounds. Just a half-mile from our reservation boundary, the proposed route crosses the Missouri River, which provides drinking water for millions of Americans and irrigation water for thousands of acres of farming and ranching lands.

Our tribe has opposed the Dakota Access pipeline since we first learned about it in 2014. Although federal law requires the Corps of Engineers to consult with the tribe about its sovereign interests, permits for the project were approved and construction began without meaningful consultation. The Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of the Interior and the National Advisory Council on Historic Preservation supported more protection of the tribe's cultural heritage, but the Corps of Engineers and Energy Transfer Partners turned a blind eye to our rights. The first draft of the company's assessment of the planned route through our treaty and ancestral lands did not even mention our tribe.

The Dakota Access pipeline was fast-tracked from Day 1 using the Nationwide Permit No. 12 process, which grants exemption from environmental reviews required by the Clean Water Act and the National Environmental Policy Act by treating the pipeline as a series of small construction sites. And unlike the better-known Keystone XL project, which was finally canceled by the Obama administration last year, the Dakota Access project does not cross an international border — the condition that mandated the more rigorous federal assessment of the Keystone pipeline's economic justification and environmental impacts.

The Dakota Access route is only a few miles shorter than what was proposed for the Keystone project, yet the government's environmental assessment addressed only the portion of the pipeline route that traverses federal land. Domestic projects

"This fight is not just for the interests of the Standing Rock Sioux tribe, but also for those of our neighbors on the Missouri River: The ranchers and farmers and small towns who depend on the river have shown overwhelming support for our protest."

of this magnitude should clearly be evaluated in their totality — but without closer scrutiny, the proposal breezed through the four state processes.

Perhaps only in North Dakota, where oil tycoons wine and dine elected officials, and where the governor, Jack Dalrymple, serves as an adviser to the Trump campaign, would state and county governments act as the armed enforcement for corporate interests. In recent weeks, the state has militarized my reservation, with road blocks and license-plate checks, low-flying aircraft and racial profiling of Indians. The local sheriff and the pipeline company have both called our protest "unlawful," and Gov. Dalrymple has declared a state of emergency.

It's a familiar story in Indian Country. This is the third time that the Sioux Nation's lands and resources have been taken without regard for tribal interests. The Sioux peoples signed treaties in 1851 and 1868. The government broke them before the ink was dry.

When the Army Corps of Engineers dammed the Missouri River in 1958, it took our riverfront forests, fruit orchards and most fertile farmland to create Lake

A sign reading Mni Wiconi, meaning water is life, is a system protecting the sacredness of the Lakota drinking water. The sign hangs on the gates of the protest site. (Photo by Latoya Lonelodge)

Oahe. Now the Corps is taking our clean water and sacred places by approving this river crossing. Whether it's gold from the Black Hills or hydropower from the Missouri or oil pipelines that threaten our ancestral inheritance, the tribes have always paid the price for America's prosperity.

Protecting water and our sacred places has always been at the center of our cause. The Indian encampment on the Cannonball grows daily, with nearly 90 tribes now represented. Many of us have been here before, facing the destruction of homelands and waters, as time and time again tribes were ignored when we opposed projects like the Dakota Access pipeline.

Our hand continues to be open to cooperation, and our cause is just. This fight is not just for the interests of the Standing Rock Sioux tribe, but also for those of our neighbors on the Missouri River: The ranchers and farmers and small towns who depend on the river have shown overwhelming support for our protest.

As American citizens, we all have a responsibility to speak for a vision of the future that is safe and productive for our grandchildren. We are a peaceful people and our tribal council is committed to nonviolence; it is our constitutional right to express our views and take this stand at the Cannonball camp. Yet the lieutenant governor of North Dakota, Drew Wrigley, has threatened to use his power to end this historic, peaceful gathering.

We are also a resilient people who have survived unspeakable hardships in the past, so we know what is at stake now. As our songs and prayers echo across the prairie, we need the public to see that in standing up for our rights, we do so on behalf of the millions of Americans who will be affected by this pipeline.

As one of our greatest leaders, Chief Sitting Bull of the Hunkpapa Lakota, once said: "Let us put our minds together and see what life we can make for our children." That appeal is as relevant today as it was more than a century ago.

Minors trust account

The money that is being put into the trust is the per capita payments and the person that actually manages the trust is called a trustee and that's us. We will hold the assets, we'll take of them, we will do the accounting and statements and part of that will be investments, and the investing part will be taken care of Will Gungoll with Edward Jones."

Fuller said the whole purpose of the trust is to benefit the minors who are the beneficiaries. It is one trust consisting of many individual accounts for each minor.

"We admire all the tribes we work with and are really looking forward to working with this tribe," Fuller said.

Fuller stepped through information about the trusts covering mailing of individual statements twice a year, allowable distributions for kid's health and education and any tax ramifications of distributions.

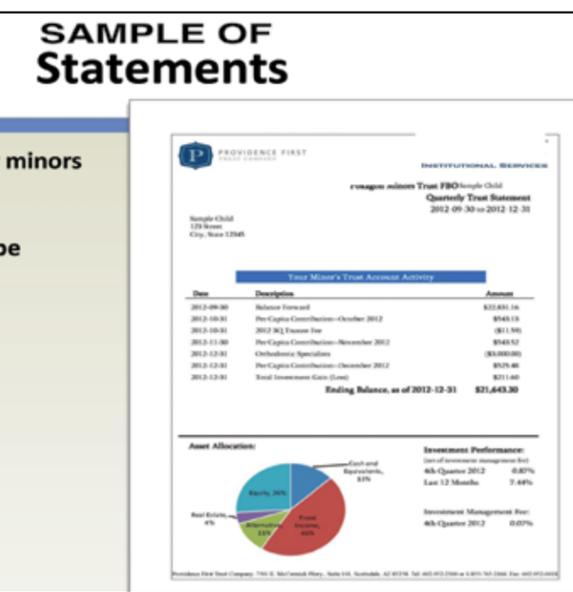

"We have a full staff on hand that will step you through any process, answer any questions, and they are trained to work with parents and guardians everywhere to better help you understand the trust," Fuller said.

Edward Jones' Financial Advisor, Will Gungoll likened the minor's trust to a 401K retirement fund stating, "The trust is similar to a 401K with the 401K end game being retirement and the minor's trust end game being 18."

Gungoll said his particular tribe does not offer minor trusts and looks at this as a blessing for tribal members to have this for their kids.

"What do I do? We will invest the money to be in the best interest for the kids. In the state of Oklahoma how they invest money for minors college accounts is they use age brackets and different risk levels. So we will be working with Providence to get the money invested in the best of the kids, and so how do we do that?" Gungoll asked. "I don't want to get too complicated but the way we are going to be investing this money is through what we call mutual funds. What that means is picture this big bucket that someone owns and inside this bucket they will have aggressive investments which have a potential for high risk, but also high returns, and it can also be a bucket full of investments such as U.S. government bonds and it could have thousands of bonds in the bucket and have a very conservative approach. Bottom line is depending on the age of the minor is how we will invest it. The older the child is the more conservative we would be in investing because we want the child to have the most benefit and investment return on the money."

A question and answer session followed at the Concho and Oklahoma City meetings with many tribal citizens indicating their understanding and approval of the minor's trust accounts.

The Cheyenne and Arapaho Legislature are scheduled to vote on the acceptance of the fee agreement and investment policy statement for the minor's trust during their Sept. 10 regular session in Concho, Okla.

Personal reflections traveling to North Dakota

By Latoya Lonelodge

My trip was long and weary; I could feel the climate changing state to state. The elevation along with the scenery was changing. There were no big buildings, streetlights or overpopulated areas; you could see miles and miles of landscapes. With little to no knowledge of what to expect I was well on my way to Standing Rock Sioux reservation where I would witness firsthand the making of history.

Upon arriving on Standing Rock little did I know just how populated the reservation would be with tents, teepees, cars, canoes, people and horses. It was massive scenery of a gathering of various tribes and nations alike. People from different tribes welcomed one another with hugs and handshakes. It was humid by day, but there were people willing to help in any way they could. Volunteers ready to lend a helping hand in serving food, water and other assistance. By night temperatures would drop tremendously to almost unbearable freezing weather but people continued to sing, rejoice and the sounds of drums grew louder each night. In the few days that I was there I noticed that the people who traveled thousands of miles from various locations had come to be apart of something they truly believed in. Protecting the water. I noticed that even though everybody was from different backgrounds, everyone was greeted with appreciation as if nobody was considered a stranger. It was a peaceful setting. I could smell campfires, the food being served, and the smell of sage burning. Seeing so many tribes traveling and going the distance to stand together and unite against the DAPL made me realize that this was the start of a nation rising. There were different people who came forward to speak on behalf of their tribe and show their support against the DAPL. I witnessed firsthand the celebration of unity amongst all tribes.

It was not long before the Comanche Code Talker Bus arrived with over 40 tribal passengers, mostly from Okla. Their appearance was more than enough for a celebration that was spread all throughout the campgrounds as everyone came to greet the traveling passengers.

With growing numbers of tribes supporting the fight against DAPL, members of the Standing Rock Sioux reservation were encouraging the hope that more help would come and more people will become aware of how important the water is within each of our lives.
